

CAREER & COLLEGE SUCCESS

Our students are the future change-makers, leaders, and societal contributors. We must ensure we galvanize to provide them the experiences they need to achieve success today.

We're strengthening the pipeline to success through Career and College Success.

With a specific focus on Career & Technical Education and Career Development, we can help ensure the continued success of one of the largest district-run work-based learning programs in the country and a nationally-recognized career pathways model. Programs that may benefit from support include the Launch Internship Program and other work-based learning opportunities, the expansion of new career pathways, and concurrent enrollment opportunities.

When our students graduate ready for what's next, we all benefit. Denver Public Schools has set out on an ambitious path to dramatically improve how we're preparing students for college and future careers. By implementing a pipeline of Career and Technical Education pathways, DPS is preparing our future leaders for the very jobs that are in highest demand in Denver. This ensures we are strengthening our city and our students' futures.

The need

Our schools must do more to engage, prepare, and inspire college and career-ready students, and our programs must better align to employer and post-secondary needs.

What your support means

Research shows that students engaged in a career program have up to a 30% greater likelihood of graduating high school than their counterparts.
